Chapter 1: Saints of Divine Gaze

The Alchemy of the Awliya:

Among the eminent disciples of Haji Tarangzeb Sahib was Haji Muhammad Ameen, a man distinguished for his resolute spiritual mission. His reputation was particularly noted for frequenting assemblies of public sinners—not for indulgence, but for offering counsel and reformation.

Into the Lion's Den: A Risked Encounter

On one such occasion, a lavish gathering was underway at the residence of a particularly harsh and aggressive individual. This host, upon hearing of Haji Muhammad Ameen's habit of entering such places for reformative preaching, warned his associates sternly:

Host:

"If Haji Muhammad Ameen dares to step into my house, he shall not return safely."

Unshaken by threats, Haji Muhammad Ameen remained steadfast in his principle. He believed firmly in fulfilling his duty of sincere advice.

Haji Muhammad Ameen:

"I must give my brother sincere counsel. If he accepts it, then good; if not, at least I will have discharged my responsibility."

Sealed Doors and Silent Resolve:

Upon arrival, Haji Sahib found the house tightly closed. He instructed his disciples to begin reciting the Kalimah Tayyibah aloud outside the entrance. Eventually, the host yielded and opened the door.

A Sacred Gesture: Transformation by Touch

Once inside, Haji Muhammad Ameen spoke to no one. He quietly removed his blessed shawl—the same one he used during dhikr (remembrance) and muraqabah (meditative reflection)—and solemnly placed it over the head of the courtesan present, in place of her dupatta.

Haji Muhammad Ameen:

"Here, she is my daughter now. I take her under my veil."

Repentance and Redemption:

The effect of this silent but powerful act deeply touched the woman's heart. Overwhelmed by this unspoken honour, she vowed in return:

Courtesan:

"Haji Sahib! From this day forward, I shall honour this chadar. I repent from this sinful profession. This blessed covering will always remain my shield and veil."

Thus concluded an episode that exemplified the alchemical gaze of the saints, whose influence could awaken transformation without confrontation—through sincerity, silence, and spiritual authority.
